19 November 2020
3.30pm - 5.00pm
Webinar

Synopsis

This seminar reviews the important developments in Company Law in 2019. It will begin by discussing the vexed issue of the objective-subjective standard that is applied to the requirement that directors act in the best interests of the company, as well as the difficult question of the relationship between the statutory duties in the Companies Act and those at common law that apply to directors. The year also saw a number of useful cases relating to share valuation and these will be outlined. There were also a number of cases involving shareholder disputes that gave rise to important cases on the derivative action, just and equitable winding up, and the oppression remedy which deserve careful study and reflection.
